

Casting Call for theatre play (In-Person "live" performance)

Overview:

Directed by acclaimed theatre director, Samantha Scott-Blackhall, this two-hander centres around two teenage characters of different races who are classmates at school. Due to an illness, the female character stays mostly at home. She displays a dry humour most of the time and rarely lets anyone into her life. She hates school, and she hates being sick. The male character is athletic, sensitive and popular. He loves life and embraces the ups and downs that come with it.

The play begins with the two characters meeting to complete the English project for which their teacher had grouped them together to do. Their deadline looms. As these two characters let down their guards and share their secrets, the seemingly mundane English poetry project unlocks a much deeper mystery that has brought them together.
